Brian's Report

What are traditions? Traditions are going to the game with your best friends and hosting a tail gate party to cheer on your favorite team together. It's baking grandma's recipe at Christmas, believing in Santa Claus and then the magic and spirit of Christmas.

It's decorating your house up for Halloween and getting in costume to celebrate. It's family reunions and long chats around the campfire. It's the music that you hear that brings tears to your eyes and joy to your heart. It's laughing until you're crying with your best friends.

But why? I think it's more important to living then you might even think. Living up to traditions is reaching for the fullest and most that life has to offer. It's not taking for granted that this is it. This is the best of life. Missing it is missing out on that pinnacle of living. Making a tradition is truly living.

So how are traditions made? Well, sometimes we have an epiphany and there it is. Sometimes, it's something we just start doing and keep doing year after year. But usually, it's passed down to us by family. These are the ones that take careful nurturing because sometimes we take for granted the tradition maker and when they're gone, there's no one ready to carry the flame. No matter how you get your traditions. Treasure them and make sure they live on. I know it takes some extra effort and relaxation is calling but be part of it. Pick your part in it; get involved in it. Remember, you can't get this moment back. Be a part of it. Life is meant to be savored and this moment is the pinnacle of living.
